

GOVERNANCE, RISK AND COMPLIANCE

Corporate Governance and Anti Corruption Practice

3 day course

Classroom, online or in-house

Course overview

Corruption rarely arrives as a bribe in an envelope; it arrives as a supplier nobody can trace, a payment approved by somebody with no authority, and a board that received a report saying everything was in order. This course covers closing those gaps. Delegates work through board oversight and the questions a board must ask rather than accept answers to, the governance codes and what they require in practice, and delegation of authority as the control that decides who can commit the organisation. Conflict of interest declaration and management follow. The mechanisms corruption actually uses are covered: procurement, recruitment, related party transactions and facilitation payments. Whistleblowing and investigation are addressed. The course closes on consequence management, without which every other control is advisory.

What you will learn

- Ask the questions a board must ask rather than accepting assurances
- Apply the governance codes to practical board decisions
- Set delegation of authority so commitments are properly controlled
- Declare and manage conflicts of interest
- Recognise how corruption uses procurement, recruitment and related parties
- Handle facilitation payments and the legal exposure they create
- Apply consequence management so controls are not merely advisory

Who should attend

- Non executive and executive directors
- Company secretaries and governance officers
- Chief compliance and ethics officers
- Internal audit managers
- Public sector accounting officers
