

PURCHASING, LOGISTICS AND SUPPLY CHAIN

Logistics and Transport Management

5 day course

Classroom, online or in-house

Course overview

Transport is usually the largest controllable cost in a supply chain and the one where a small planning improvement produces a disproportionate saving. This course covers managing it. Delegates work through mode selection and its trade offs, network design and the location decisions that determine most transport cost before any route is planned, and routing and scheduling against real constraints. Carrier selection, contracting and rate structures are covered, along with the measurement of cost per unit delivered rather than cost per trip. The course addresses African transport realities directly: road condition, border delay, security and the buffer these genuinely require.

What you will learn

- Select transport mode against cost, time and risk
- Design a network and understand how location decisions fix cost
- Plan routes and schedules against real constraints
- Select and contract carriers, and interpret rate structures
- Measure cost per unit delivered rather than per trip
- Plan for border delay, road condition and security
- Decide between owned fleet and third party transport

Who should attend

- Logistics and transport managers
- Supply chain professionals
- Distribution and dispatch planners
- Procurement staff buying transport
- Operations managers with delivery accountability
